Sourcebook 2000 would not have been possible without the support and assistance of several institutions and a number of very dedicated individuals. Our primary debt is to The Pew Charitable Trusts, which provided the lion's share of the funding. We are also grateful to the Carnegie Corporation of New York, the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution and Peace, and the Stanford Institute for the Quantitative Study of Society for their additional financial support, and to Stanford University, which established and supports the Political Communication Laboratory.

We would also like to thank both major presidential campaigns, which graciously provided us with access to their candidates' speeches and campaign commercials. We are especially indebted to Matt Dowd and Mary Beth Farr from the George W. Bush campaign, and to Mark Fabiani and Bill Knapp from the Al Gore team for ensuring our continuous access to the campaign materials. The complete transparency of both sides stands in stark contrast to the widespread and cynical stereotype about the nature of political campaigns.

Finally, we extend our very special thanks to Bob Stein, CEO of Night Kitchen.com. At short notice, Bob provided us with an advanced (and remarkably bug-free) version of his TK3 ebook software. TK3 not only made possible an aesthetically pleasing publication, but will also facilitate our research into the effects of ebook usage on voter attitudes. Our project would not have been feasible without Bob's generous assistance.

The individuals who contributed to this project at Stanford are: at the Political Communication Laboratory, John Walker, Kyu Hahn, and Markus Prior; at Stanford Mediaworks, Catherine O'Brien, Amy Shavelson, and Janet Zipp; graphic artists, Drue Katoaka (original artwork) and Hiram Alvarez, and at the Department of Communication, Barbara Katoaka.

We have made every effort to ensure the accuracy and completeness of the materials comprising the ebook. Any errors of omission, transcription, or presentation were inadvertent.
